

One day, while the rabbit was walking gallantly he met the turtle. So he started talking proudly of his speed, that he is the fastest animal whereas she, to the contrary, is very slow-moving.

The turtle was very angry and felt extremely sad; however she wanted to teach the arrogant rabbit a lesson. She suggested that they should race. The rabbit, and the other forest animals, were astonished and laughed sarcastically.

The turtle insisted on the race on condition that the forest animals should be the judges. They agreed that the end-line of the race was the big tree at the town's entrance. The rabbit and the turtle were ready for the race.

At the starting point, the rabbit rushed fast while the turtle was a long distance behind him. The other animals were laughing mockingly. How could such a slow turtle take part in such a race?

The rabbit looked back but he didn't see the turtle, so he lay on the green grass and fell asleep. A few hours later the turtle passed the rabbit while he was still sleeping under the tree. She never made a sound but kept on walking.

The rabbit awoke suddenly and looked back but didn't see the turtle. He was bewildered and jumped upon seeing the turtle approaching the big tree. So he ran fast but at the moment when he was getting close to the end of the race, the turtle was already passing the end-line.

All the animals cheered the turtle. The rabbit was very embarrassed. The turtle said calmly to him, "do you realize now who is the fastest? It takes struggle, rather than arrogance, to achieve miracles."

Help the rabbit reach the turtle through this maze. Which path must he follow?