Nemnema knew that her dear friend, Hoda, was ill. She excused her parents to visit her.

During the visit, Nemnema tried to cheer up her friend and she told her the news of the school.

Nemnema gave Hoda her notebooks to know about the homework that should be done.

Hoda asked Nemnema to let her copy the answers of some sums to save time.

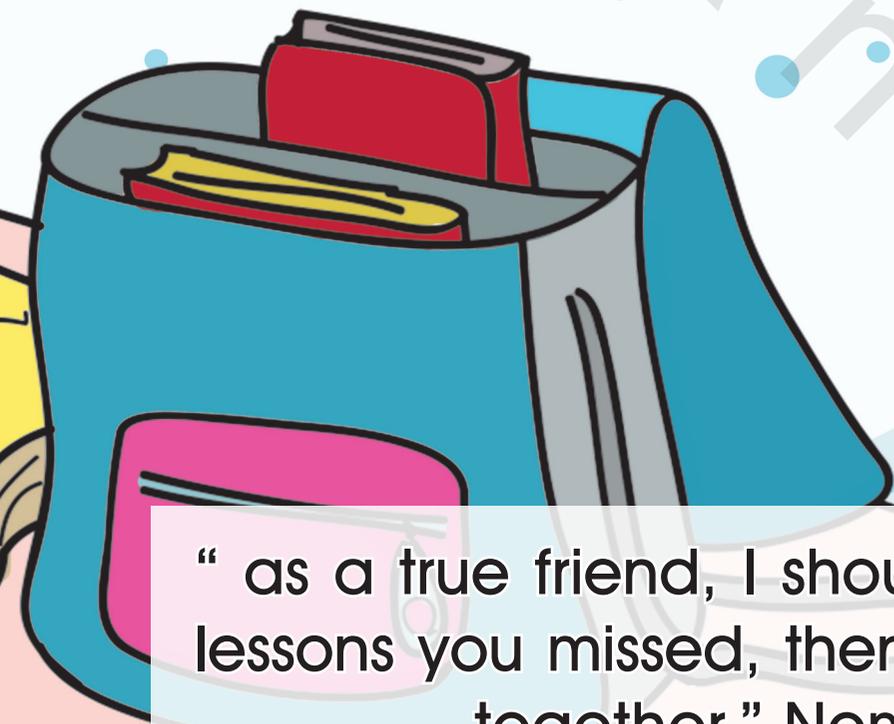

Nemnema refused to let her copy the answers. Hoda was upset. “You are my best friend. Why do not you want to help me?” Hoda said to Nemnema.

“If I let you copy the answers this will be cheating; the teacher will think that you have done them by yourself” Nemnema said.

“The teacher may ask you how you have answered them. If you did not know she would call you a cheater.” Nemnema said.

“ as a true friend, I should explain to you the lessons you missed, then we can do the sums together.” Nemnema said.

“in this way, you will be able to do the sums by yourself without lying.” Nemnema said.

Hoda was convinced with what Nemnema had said. Hoda sat with Nemnema to know how to do the sums.

When Hoda returned back to school, the teacher asked her to do some sums on the board. At that time she knew what true friendship really was.
